

Cascade Springs Receives Planning Award

30 Apr 1970
The Utah Recreation and Parks Association cited the Cascade Springs Interpretive Area on the Uinta National Forest as the outstanding recreation development in Utah for 1970.

The award was made at the annual conference held recently in St. George.

In presenting the award to Lyle Smith, the Forest representative, the Association commended the development for uniqueness and ingenuity by which it was developed for visitor use. As a significant environmental feature, it was done in such a way as to protect and display its naturalness to all, including the handicapped, senior citizens, and those having special educational interests.

In accepting the award, Smith stated Cascade Springs is the product of a large number of individuals and organizations who contributed many thoughts and ideas, from its conception through final development and operation.

Visitors can witness the seasonal changes now that Cascade Springs and its facilities are part of the American Fork Snowmobile Trail.

During the summer, the trip over the Alpine Scenic Loop and the newly completed Cascade Scenic Drive offers the visitor additional inspirational and environmental appreciation on the journey both to and from the Springs. Camp and picnic sites adjoin Cascade Springs in the Wasatch Mountain State Park.
